

A. Peachey received his Master's degree in Applied Geography and Doctorate in Public Health from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, USA. He is currently an Assistant Professor in the Department of Health Sciences at James Madison University where he teaches courses in epidemiology and research methods. His research interests include: (1) understanding the distribution of physical and social resources in communities in order to develop health promotion strategies and policies within a socio-ecological framework and (2) increasing translation and utilization of research findings through community-based participatory research (CBPR).